ark: can you sudo lspci -v jvargas, i just want to be able to adjust the brightness without having to hold a button robotdevil, sure ark: wait, there are alternative ways ark: not that complicated robotdevil, thank you for your time. ark: i'm curious, does xbacklight work for you? sudo apt-get install xbacklight and see what happens. jvargas, what are they? ark: sudo dpkg-reconfigure keyboard-configuration jrib: well, I have three accounts on that same machine. ark: if xbacklight works, i'd be tempted to try that! personally, i haven't used xbacklight on ubuntu for ages. ark: then just choose the keyboard layout you want and it will set it, or change it ark: I was able to use that with an XPS Neatehee: yes, but the terminal has to have root privileges zykoick9, i'm on it now jrib: Well, the root account is disabled, and I have my user account set to sudoers. zykoick9, hold on it isn't working... Neatehee: you still need to have the bash shell open ark: what is not working? ark: does "xbacklight -set 200" work? does "xbacklight -set 0" not work? jvargas, it worked a few minutes ago but i can't see the brightness drop to 0 what command are you executing and what does it say? what does it say when you type "xbacklight - 82157476af
